Graduate School of Sustainability Studies at University of Toyama
Global Sustainability Science Program (GSSP)
Master's Course

A pathway towards preparing future leaders for the contribution of a sustainable society

Why study at Global Sustainability Science Program (GSSP)?

The Global Sustainability Science Program offers an interdisciplinary approach to addressing current societal problems by nurturing human resources capacity and formulating strategies for future sustainable pathways.

The master's program focuses on global environmental challenges and societal transformations from a local to a worldwide level through linking social and natural sciences. The program will provide students with a wide-ranging experience of the interlinkages among multiple fields such as economic, social, environmental, cultural, and human aspects of sustainability. From this program, students will learn to develop skills to design and communicate solutions to sustainability challenges and deepen their understanding of the role of sustainability studies in addressing current problems to global change that creates a future pathway as sustainable development experts. Our teaching and research profile combines forward-thinking scientific knowledge across inter- and multidisciplinary academics in the sustainable development of both the social and natural sciences. Through this program, students gain critical thinking and can enhance their problem-solving capacity to contribute to a sustainable and prosperous society.

If you are considering joining our graduate school, please follow the three steps below.

【STEP 1】 Download “Student Application Guidelines”

You can download the guidelines by clicking on Application Guideline [pdf file] at:
<https://www.gss.u-toyama.ac.jp/2022/11/04/1007/?lang=ja>

Please carefully read “Student Application Guidelines” and check the admission requirements.

The Global Sustainability Science Program (GSSP) in the Graduate School of Sustainability accepts applications from all over the world. Japanese proficiency is NOT required in this program. The students from a country where their mother language is not English will be required to submit the result of TOEIC/TOEFL or another equivalent test of English proficiency.

Three steps for joining our graduate school

【STEP 1】 Download “Student Application Guidelines”

You can download the guidelines by clicking on Application Guideline [pdf file] at:
<https://www.gss.u-toyama.ac.jp/2022/11/04/1007/?lang=ja>

Please carefully read “Student Application Guidelines” and check the admission requirements.

【STEP 2】 Finding your supervisor

- The right supervisor-student matching affects your graduate training environment. Please peruse the faculty listing in Student Application Guidelines or our website to determine which faculty have similar research interests to your own.
- You need to contact any and all that are potential supervisors to discuss your research interests prior to completion of the application process. You can directly send your mail to discuss your interest with potential supervisors.
- When you are not aware of a prospective supervisor, the administration office will serve a bridge between you and the faculty.

Please send us a mail as followings:

1. The subject of your mail should be “Asking Matching with a supervisor (GSSP).
2. Attach the file to describe your research interest.
3. List the name of the faculty members who can be expected to be your supervisor(s).
